

RELATIONSHIPS

ROMANCE/CLASS #3

Webster describes romance as, "Something that lacks basis and fact. Imaginary, visionary. Marked by the imaginative or emotional appeal of the heroic, adventurous, remote, mysterious or idealized. A passionate love affair."

In relation to the Truth, romance is the touching of the emotional bodies with words, ideas and finer vibrations of thought using the power of the inner image for both parties. Romance is one of the most beautiful words in our english language. Its true meaning is one of the most intriguing experiences that humans have, but they do not experience it on a completely physical level. Many times it is what is suggested with glances or words that allows the imagination to soar. As this happens the emotional bodies of the two individuals actually intertwine and touch. As this emotional exchange is taking place the two people may feel physically elated or excited. Many times there are sensations of tingling and the sensuous although there is actually no real physical contact. It is sometimes much more titillating than the physical word or touch can be. It is romance from a higher level than the physical that brings the physical bodies together in sexual intercourse.

The experience itself happens inside the individual. Most people only experience THEIR emotions and thoughts about the other individual. They are usually unaware of what emotions their partner has or what can be said, done or suggested to trigger these very special feelings for them. The ideal or intention here is not only to enjoy your own emotions of romance, but to enjoy and enhance your partner's. As you learn to appreciate one another's feelings and desires you develop a deeper, more lasting relationship. The amount of emotional interaction that takes place between the two partners determines the type of relationship it will be.

Romantic feelings are emotions stimulated from the Higher Source of Divine Love. The Divine Love comes directly from the Godhead then changes vibrations as it enters the individual's emotional body. It changes according to the person's concepts or thoughts. It is interpreted by their physical body language such as gestures, facial expressions, etc. Romance is actually a form of love which enhances sexual intercourse and stimulation to much greater heights.

Using words alone to express feelings and emotions can be very limiting and sometimes inadequate. By simply observing the likes and dislikes of your partner you can discover what stimulates their romantic imagination. A mere flower, a special book, a loving glance...any number of things can please or excite your mate.

It is said that it is not how long you know a person but how well you know a person. A friend can be in your life for a number of years and not know personal things about you such as your favorite color, drink, season, etc. Another friend will come into your life and will instantly know all these things and more through observation. They will go out of their way to be aware of these "little personal" things that can mean so much.

Be alert! Ask yourself how much you know about your partner. Make a check list. Figure out how much you know about him/her compared to how much you would like to know about him/her. Instead of thinking what YOU like and dislike all the time, think of what THEIR likes are. Be considerate of these personals and you will trigger the exchange of romance between you both.

As we move into a better understanding of these concepts and how they can be utilized to communicate desire to another we see that thoughts are a growing expression that individuals respond to more than they realize.

Feelings are thoughts. They exist on many levels. Feelings from an emotional level can be reached much easier than thoughts from other levels. We must learn to watch for and correctly interpret these thoughts as they are transferred through non-verbal conversations. Becoming aware of people's gestures, facial expressions, movements and what they really mean is a very important part of observation.

The feeling of romance is transferred mostly through our thoughts and goes directly to the individual we are thinking about.

Romance is sexual intercourse on a higher level than the physical. When either partner settles for just the physical release without touching the emotional body of the other partner with their romantic thoughts and feelings both are deprived of the total experience. We cheat ourselves and our partner of this highest aspect of relating to and becoming one with life when we deprive them of our feelings, thoughts and desires.

Look at your list of qualities desired in the opposite sex from last week's class homework. Now that your list is complete, start BECOMING in consciousness that which is on your list. Once you attain this state of consciousness you will easily attract this type of individual to you. If you already have a mate, then by becoming that which you desire, in consciousness, will improve your life and your relationship with your mate because you will be happier with yourself.

Feeling good about yourself will affect your relationship in a very positive way; enhancing every aspect of the relationship. You must have the consciousness of that which you desire for you attract others at your same level of consciousness.

BE AWARE OF THE CONSCIOUSNESS THAT YOU ARE!
